An animated interview with Mexican-model María Roldán about What is beauty?

Emilia Schettino

I'm a Mexican illustrator and animator. I studied Graphic Design in Mexico City and after that, I started my career as an illustrator and animator.

I've worked for magazines, brands and animation studios while doing personal projects.

I recently moved to London to do a Master in Animation at Royal College of Art, doing what I like the most, telling stories through images.

Satoshi Takahashi (1978)

born in Tokyo, Japan. He started his career at Polygon Pictures, then joined Marza Animation Planet at its inception era (at the time, it was called the VE Research & Development Department, and was part of Sega) as a 3D Modeler, where he worked on many game cinematics and feature films. More recently, his focus has been on the real time engine integration in movie production, and leads a real time engine production team at Marza since 2017.

In the middle of the night... Sarah wakes up as she wants to go to the bathroom.

As she leaves her room, she finds herself alone in the dark hallway, and it is really creepy.

Even the toys she left out look totally different from how they looked during the day.

Sarah finally pulls herself together and starts to move forward, with her animal doll friend named Steven, who's got a shiny nose to show her way, but – she trips!

When she picks herself up off the ground, she finds herself in a creepy forest with a tall toilet tower in the distance...

It must be an imaginary world born from her fear.

Janique Viljoen Born and raised in a small farming town, in the Free State, Janique Viljoen would move to Cape Town and begin her studies at the Animation School with the hopes of creating and telling stories for the next generation of Afrikaans children. She admires that animation is one of the rare mediums that are understood so universally and that there are bits and pieces for the whole family to enjoy. Understanding just how powerful this can be she believes that it is up to us, as filmmakers to use this medium to our advantage at making the world a better, happier place. That is why in her third-year Graduation film, together with her team they decide to make an Afrikaans film for their younger selves.

Settling down after weeks of trekking through the South African grassland, a little girl who yearns for independence is not yet trusted to leave the confines of the secure campsite. Forced to impatiently wait for her tough loving dad to return, amidst the height of her boredom, the safety of their campsite is compromised. Rita jumps to take matters into her own inexperienced hands, yet as the dust settles, her independence is left hanging by a thread. Stuck between a useless guard dog, a headstrong ox and a sticky place, Rita needs to perform a miracle to get the camp back the way it was before her stern dad returns and she's bound to face her biggest fear: the wooden spoon.

When we question our youngsters about the Spirit of Lion Rock, they found that they hesitate and they are not able to answer. It is because our youngsters had never experienced the hardest period in Hong Kong before. Hong Kong is now cooling down from her vigorous growth in the past. From the saying of elders that go, the Spirit of Lion Rock is "as you reap, so you sow". What a sigh to say that the spirit that we are proud of is being forgotten by the time. Coming to this generation, what does the Spirit of Lion Rock truly mean to us?

Guodong Yu is an animation director, independent animation maker, painter and photographer. He was born in Guangdong province, China and is now a first-year MFA student at Tongji University Shanghai.

His works are often based on his insight into the relationship between generations in real life. In his opinion, a child's emotional world was usually rich, colorful but not expressive. It might lead to direct and naive behaviors and cause conflicts with the world of adults.

Guodong Yu believes that animations and films have the power to communicate with audience without any language, and to tell stories using just images.

In the cold northeast China, people lived by hunting for generations. A little boy born in a hunter family seemed to have a mysterious connection with the forest. Killing animals upset him but he couldn't stop his father. The relationship between them became increasingly tense, just like the thick winter snow hard to melt. Eventually, the boy's naive behavior changed the fate of both.

Matheus Leite Pereira was born in the city of Curvelo, Minas Gerais, Brazil, on February 10, 1995. With his mother working at a college and his father being an artist, his childhood was always surrounded by literature and art. From a very young age, Matheus created his own comic books and wrote short stories, making the creative process essential to his growth. At the beginning of his adult life, he studied basic drawing at the Casa dos Quadrinhos in Belo Horizonte, Minas Gerais. Soon after, he joined the Animation Cinema and Digital Arts course at the Federal University of Minas Gerais. And in college, Matheus, with the collaboration of his colleagues, Guilherme Garcia, Giovanni Coutinho and Josué Soares, produced the short Rosa, a reimagination of a popular local myth in his country.

is an independent filmmaker and artist whose films have been screened internationally at film and animation festivals. She has been awarded the Director's Citation twice at The Black Maria Film Festival, and Best Animation at both the Chicago Underground Film Festival and The Ann Arbor Film Festival. Her films include The Guilt Trip, or The Vatican's Take a Holiday, Mermaid, The Ordovicians, and Anonanimal, a music video for Andrew Bird. She's also created large puppets for several Chicago-based theater companies. When not animating or teaching she creates artist books, collages, puppets, and participates in the occasional odd performance art piece. She lives in Chicago and teaches at DePaul University in the School of Cinematic Arts.

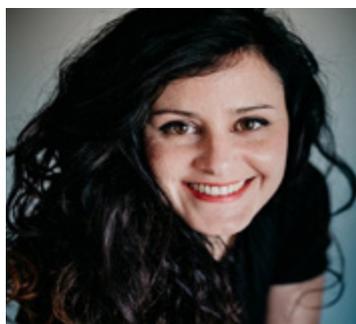

A group of tattered paper dolls day-dream alternate realities and surreptitiously explore the hidden lives of their strict and secretive caregivers. Hijinks ensue and discoveries are made as the characters live out their childhood fantasies. Created with found paper dolls cut from a 1920's newspaper and found in an attic, the film explores the adults attempt to dictate what girls learn, and the children's talent for discovering forbidden knowledge.

During the Bachelor of Fine Arts in the Basque Country (2006-2011) she realizes the massive possibilities that animation could have and decided to participate on different kind of projects such as Mapping on facades, animated theater and a short film which was made out of a combination of techniques, this last one film gave her the chance to reach her last goal, studying the MA (2012-2014) in StopMotion Animation at the University of the West of England, UK. That was possible thanks to the Grant of Extension of Artistic Studies of the Government of Navarra. Then she decided to continue her studies on direction for animation at the Master de Animación at UPV, Valencia, where she could develop a short-film named PATCHWORK. (2016-2018) This last step was possible thanks to another grant, CAN Foundation and the MA at Universitat Politècnica [51] de València.

Patchwork is based on the real life of Loly, a woman from a little town in the north of Spain, a place educated by old and deep beliefs where she has grown up and has raised a family.

During the 8 minutes long, that the film lasts, we are able to see a continuous reference to the patchwork concept.

Patchwork is the technique of reusing fabrics to create new textiles, transplants have the same aim, so this the parallelism between re-using materials and re-use organs.

This project use different animation techniques depending of what it is said, It gives the technique a way of express itself.

Farzaneh Omidvarnia was born on December 9, 1983 in Shiraz, Iran. Graduating from Tehran University, faculty of fine arts. she received a PhD in Design in 2015 from Technical University of Denmark. Following her graduation, she began to focus on creation of fabric sculptures and paintings. Her artworks soon appeared in several art exhibition in Europe and Iran. In 2017, she directed and produced her first film "To Be". The movie was acclaimed internationally and won prizes in different festival. Her second film "Song Sparrow" has been released in April 2019.

"Song Sparrow" is about immigration. People of different color and race and culture, old and young, embark on journeys, eager to find some place they can call home, or just some place they can live in. Many brave perils more formidable than the ones they ran for in the first place. It is not always weathering storms till and onto shores of calm and prosperity; many a time storms keep them company on and off shores. They dream of better lives while in reality having little choice.

It is about a real event, which happened in Austria in August 2015, where flesh and bone of human and animal become intermingled. This short movie may inspire the viewer to ask: "is it better to go or stay", or more accurately: "is it worse to stay than to go? Is a large chunk of humanity entrapped by events befallen their lands many centuries before they were even born?"

Rachel Portová

Growing up in the Czech Republic I've always aspired to be an artist. To pursue this dream, I moved to the UK for university to become a 2D animator. I've learnt to view animation not just as means of entertainment but also as a platform for creating stories that are worth telling. I want to bring characters to life that people care about and can experience the story with.

When a little Czech girl becomes best friends with a carp who is destined to be her Christmas dinner, she must choose between tradition and her new-found friendship.

After finishing high school, he studied graphic design at Jaschik Álmos artschool, then spent a semester at Illyés Art Academy, studying animation. In 2016 he got his diploma in animation at MOME, Budapest.

Doctor Traum, the impassioned dream-collector, decides to make his enormous collection public and guide audiences through the mysterious world of the subconscious. In the introductory episode, we bear witness to the feverish nightmare of a girl who suffers from domestic violence. The dream, which initially seems to paint an almost idyllic picture, becomes grim when the father's image appears. In the tense moment when the girl awakens from her dream, we are given a glimpse into the real world in which she lives.

She graduated from the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences in Zagreb in 2011 (Art History and Archaeology). In 2017, she graduated from the Academy of Fine Arts, in the Department of Animated Film. Her graduation film, "Process" (2017.), was screened in numerous international film festivals, and has been listed on VAF New Talents selection for 2018. She is currently working on her new projects with the Zagreb Film production company.

Iris is a girl who fell in love with her projection and then one day just disappeared in a. It is inspired by the myth of Narcissus. This Greek hero became the first person in the world to conceive of art and the first person to fall in love with an image rather than a reality. That is why this story is about vanity, but also about the perception of art. The motivation behind this movie is to shift the focus to Iris, and then retell the old story from her perspective in the age of social media.
